Dear Josh:

I have been asked by my church to lead a discussion group in January and February on ethical questions posed by present and prospective advances in human genetics. The most suitable reading I can think of assigning to participants would be certain of your newspaper columns, possibly eight or ten of them.

Are the past articles available, either singly or in complete sets? We probably ought to have at least ten copies of each article, and could use 40 if they were not too expensive. If they can be obtained singly, I would first need to obtain a complete set in order to select the most appropriate ones.

With best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Allen
